Report Highlights:

In the light of an intercepted shipment of injected meat, the Hong Kong government has written to various meat supplying countries, advising them of Hong Kong's regulation of prohibiting meat imports injected with water or liquid.

Summary

Hong Kong food safety authority remind traders that Hong Kong prohibits the importation and sale of meat and offal products which have been injected with water or liquid, though these practices may be acceptable to exporting countries.

In the light of finding a shipment of meat products which have been injected with soluble oil for modifying the texture of the product, the Hong Kong food safety authority has written to various meat supplying countries pointing out that under section 51A, Cap. 132 it is a violation to sell or import any meat or offal products which have been injected with water or liquid. While the shipment in question was not U.S. products, the country of origin was not published.

The related section of the regulation is given below.
